

Ralston Potter

January 12, 1937 - August 13, 2011

Obituary

August 13, 2011 Ralston Potter of Broken Arrow, 74, passed away July 11, 2011 in Tulsa. He was born January 12, 1937 in Jay to Jesse James and Ova (Hendren) Potter. He enjoyed his Pontiac, cracking the bull whip, horses and reading the Bible. Ralston is survived by his loving son Seth Potter and daughter-in-law Mandy of Broken Arrow; grandchildren: Josh, Ashley, Samuel and Zackery Potter; and siblings: June Yancey and Hubert Potter. Service: 10AM Friday, July 15 the Chapel; interment: Wofford Cemetery, Catoosa. Kennedy- Kennard Funeral & Cremation, Broken Arrow, 918.251.5331. To send flowers to the family or plant a tree in memory of Ralston Potter, please visit our floral store.

Tribute Wall

KA

“ The books are much better than the mieovs and create a vivid and more wonderful story and setting. If you read the last one first you will miss some threads that runs throughout the series, a reward Rowling give her loyal readers. The bad part is that you will come away feeling disappointed at the mieovs a little. Read them and enjoy them. It won't be a waste of time. ”

Kailash - February 23, 2011 at 11:00 PM

ER

“ The books are even better than the meoivs. WAY better, although I like the meoivs too. As for your other question, I highly recommend you read the other six books in their consecutive order before reading book seven. Book 7 has a lot of references to things that happened in the other books and things that are explained in the other books. It is best appreciated after having read the rest of the series. But you won't have a problem because books 1-6 are also spectacular. ”

Eros - February 23, 2011 at 11:00 PM