“ I was excited about getting the Tulsa World on Kindle when it was finally made available. I love being able to click through the stories, and not have to read half a story on the front page, then hunt it down later. I also love not having papers stack up between recycling. But alas, I was truly disappointed in the Kindle Version. It breaks up the Paper into the Big Sections, i.e. News, Business, Opinion, Scene, etc. That doesn't sound bad, but they lump every news story into news. That ends up giving the news section 45-60 stories in one section. And those 45-60 stories are not organized whatsoever. The local, state, national, and international news stories are just thrown into a folder called News, and you have to sift through every story to find the ones you want to read. It's a mess. They also leave out a lot of the good parts of the paper, such as their community calendar, pictures, and other non-kindle friendly items like cross-words and etc. And my last complaint about the paper is the typos. There were several typos, and missing article titles, and not to mention last few paragraphs of articles. All in all, it is just not a good paper for Kindle. I have switched back to the print version.

“ In the record the music link pic, I'm guessing you're the 2nd from the left. Any chance you're coming to Atlanta? I'm very good at saying awkward things to celebrities I admire, making us both uncomfortable! Andy Partridge of XTC, Neil Finn of Crowded House, Adrian Belew of himself the list stops there, as those are the only 3 I've ever spoken to. At least you're not a musician perhaps if I met you, I'd just keep my mouth shut, apart from the appropriate Nice to meet you, big fan, love your work. After all, I'll have done all my inappropriate blabbering here on your blog!
